Islamic Intellectual Atlas - revision 4

Gnamma Research. Dated intellectual genealogies, textual relationships and scholarly evidence. Revised 28 October 2026.

321 entries, 312 textual relationships, 307 source records. Earlier illustrated maps remain available separately; the catalogue and evidence in this PDF include the full Tahdhib expansion.

Open interactive map: https://gnamma-research.github.io/booksite/research/intellectual-atlas/

This register is selective and revisable. Dating is qualified; doctrinal assent is not inferred from textual reception; independent works do not mean works without sources. Arabic script, interactive history, and richer context remain on the website.

Section relationships indicate components of one work, NOT transmission. The relative position of one commentary in the diagram is not proof of its chronological precedence over another.

Scope, evidence types, and chronology

Evidence levels: A solid commentary/gloss relation identifies the actual base text. A textual-use relation requires an explicit citation or documented borrowing. Qualified broad influence identifies a philosophical background, not a claim of direct copying. Chronological succession alone creates no edge.

Dating convention: Dates concern works. Unknown works are shown with a before/after bound and null start where appropriate. A death year used as a terminus must never be displayed as an exact composition year. AH years often straddle two CE years; the month can change the correct CE year.

Iji to Taftazani: proven textual connection, contested personal connection: Taftazani explicitly uses Iji's Mawaqif. Personal tutelage is disputed; his death in 1390 excludes dependence on Jurjani's 1405 commentary.

The Mawaqif did not appear all at once: Recent manuscript research distinguishes an early c. 1330-33 version from substantial 1349-52 revision. Jawahir al-kalam abbreviates the earlier Mawaqif; Uyun abbreviates Jawahir. Those two smaller works are discussed here but not assigned atlas nodes. Continued teaching corrections prevent treating one autograph as a universal final text.

Why the Razi-Amidi-Iji links are warranted: Muhassal -> Mawaqif has a published textual comparison; Jurjani names Abkar and Nihaya. The specific Muhassal -> Abkar channel remains hypothetical.

Two Razis, two Nasafis, several Isfahanis: Fakhr al-Din and Qutb al-Din Razi differ. The creed is 'Umar Nasafi's. Isfahani here is Shams al-Din Mahmud, author of Tasdid and Matali'.

Tajrid dates and identity: A probable 669 AH authorial witness is not a composition date. The Imami base generated Sunni and Imami commentaries.

The philosophical curriculum is a parallel branch: Abhari's Hidayat al-hikma and Katibi's Hikmat al-ayn are original philosophical manuals, not commentaries on Mawaqif. Their inclusion supplies later Iranian, Ottoman and Indian curricular connections without misclassifying philosophy as a single kalam commentary chain.

Volume counts are edition-specific: The three-volume Isfahani/Jurjani edition packages several textual layers; Hilli's three-volume Nihaya is independent. Volume counts cannot rank authority or rigor.

Three precision corrections: Maqasid/sharh: January 1383. Jurjani's Mawaqif commentary:1405. Qutb's Muhakamat:1354. Preserve the verified AH month.

The extent of Razi's Matalib: Shihadeh's 2025 study identifies the ninth volume of the standard 1987 Saqqa edition as a separate work wrongly included. Books 2-7 have colophons betweenOctober 1208 andJanuary 1209; book 8 is probably incomplete. Therefore nine printed volumes should not be equated with nine securely identified original books.

Scope and dating: This selection is not exhaustive. Death or print bounds remain termini, not exact composition dates.

Central corpus without a final endpoint: The paired Hasan-Siyalkuti apparatus is influential. ISAM describes a wider gloss-edition project; its planned release is not verified here.

Regional traditions: Regions mark selected contexts; books circulated across them. A regional label does not establish an exclusive creed.

Modern contextual nodes: Abduh's 1876 gloss has a direct textual parent. His later Risala, Sabri's Mawqif, Izmirli's Yeni Ilm-i Kelam and Shibli's two kalam books supply historical orientation without fabricated single-parent arrows. Further argument-level research would map their specific citations.

Selected Maturidi branch: Kitab al-Tawhid and Tabsirat al-adilla provide early anchors, with documented later citations in Taftazani and Bayadi. The larger Maturidi corpus, including the Musayara/Musamara family, remains beyond this selection.

Shibli chronology: Composition and publication dates are sometimes conflated. Syed labels the two works 1902 and 1903. Rifai reports completion in 1902 and 1903, with publication in 1903 and 1904 respectively. The atlas uses the latter publication bounds and records the distinction.

Date discipline: A label beginning before/by is a terminus, not a composition year. Several isolated numeric coordinates mark only the latest secure bound. Publication dates for twentieth-century texts do not establish when the original teaching or writing began.

Concurrent traditions, not a single succession: Avicennan commentators, Lahiji, Rajab 'Ali/Qadi Sa'id, Shaykhism and Tafkik represent distinct projects; shared criticism does not prove common descent.

Tafkik branch: Isfahani, Qazvini and Hakimi are grouped by a documented modern school affiliation. No Abwab -> Bayan -> Maktab textual-dependence arrows are asserted. Their separation of scripture, philosophy and mysticism differs from Shaykhi ontology and from Rajab 'Ali's philosophical alternative.

Shawariq and Gawhar: Shawariq is incomplete; first writing precedes Gawhar, but revisions cite it. Lahiji's philosophical commitments are selective.

Cross-tradition teaching: Sabzavari's teaching repertoire included Jurjani's Sharh al-Mawaqif and Lahiji's Shawariq alongside Sadrian works. This is curricular coexistence, not evidence that every later text comments directly on Mawaqif.

Sadrian reception: Asfar became a major later philosophical reference, but a philosophical-school canon cannot be equated with unanimous Imami confession. Tabataba'i's philosophy teaching encountered opposition; modern Tafkik is another explicit counter-current.

Known biographical date cautions: Sadra: revised death 1635/6, traditional 1640/1. Qadi Sa'id: alive in 1696. Khafri: disputed death. Bounds reflect these uncertainties.

Textbook affiliation versus textual dependence: Bidaya and Nihaya belong to a predominantly Sadrian curriculum. Their placement in this branch does not itself prove a particular Asfar-to-text borrowing, so no such arrows are drawn.

Dawwani-Dashtaki aggregation: Dawwani and Sadr al-Din Dashtaki nodes aggregate multiple interventions. The evidence here establishes the dispute and common Qushji base, but not a fully verified installment-by-installment chronology.

No automatic Qabasat-to-Asfar arrow: Teacher-pupil biography alone does not warrant a Qabasat-to-Asfar textual arrow.

Early anchors and selection: Juwayni, Maturidi, Abu al-Muin al-Nasafi and al-Saduq are early anchors for the mapped families. The atlas does not claim to reconstruct their complete earlier genealogies or all their later commentaries.

Kalam is not merely translated Greek philosophy: Scripture, interpretation, political and communal disputes, and intra-Muslim argument are constitutive contexts. Earlier Greek or Christian parallels do not by themselves show which text a theologian read. The map therefore includes early doctrinal corpora and doxography alongside translation networks.

A lost corpus is not an extant book: Rounded context/corpus boxes identify the type of surviving evidence. An arrow from early teaching to a doxography says that it is reported there. It does not silently convert the report into a faithful transcript or prove that the reporting author had an original book.

Jewish Arabic intellectual life is a participant, not a placeholder translator: Al-Muqammis, Sa'adya and Yusuf al-Basir illustrate original Jewish theology in Arabic. Explicit Bahshami reception is strongest for al-Basir. The existence of Jewish Arabic learning does not justify inventing a Jewish mediation stage for every Greek-to-Arabic translation.

Christian Arabic authors are more than translators: Theodore and 'Ammar represent original Arabic Christian argument. Yahya's reply to al-Kindi supplies a specific textual link. A simple Christian theology -> Ash'arism arrow is withheld: shared problems, encounters, and polemical resemblances are insufficient to establish a particular parent text.

Two different early Imami debates: Saduq -> Mufid is a critical commentary within Imami theology. 'Abd al-Jabbar -> Murtada -> Muhammad al-Tusi is a cross-confessional imamate debate and abridgment. Neither establishes an unbroken textual chain to the later Tajrid of Nasir al-Din al-Tusi.

Transmission is not a single House of Wisdom institution: Use "Abbasid translation movement" as the map heading. Distinct patrons and Christian, Sabian and Muslim scholarly circles are documented; a single Bayt al-Hikma academy directing all Greek translation is not.

Christian intellectuals were authors and interpreters: Sergius and Philoponus belong to philosophical and theological traditions of their own. The Syriac and Christian Arabic material should not appear solely as a neutral arrow carrying Greek books onward.

Pythagoras is an anchor, not a fictitious book: Reported teaching, later Neopythagorean reception, and retrospective sacred genealogies must receive different relations from manuscript translation or explicit borrowing.

A Greek name can conceal an Arabic reconstruction: The Theology of Aristotle and Pure Good are Arabic Neoplatonic redactions. Keeping the Greek source and Arabic text as separate nodes prevents a false direct Aristotle-to-later-Islamic-system chain.

Buddhist contacts require two evidentiary tracks: The Bilawhar narratives and their use by Saduq supply a concrete literary/apologetic connection. Buddhist contributions to kalam epistemology or atomism remain a debated reconstruction; similarity does not identify a translated source text.

Buddhist hypothesis map placement: The buddhist_kalam_hypothesis node may be connected by a hypothesis edge to an early-kalam context anchor. Do not point it at a single Sanskrit book or at all later kalam doctrines. A comparison panel can place the proposal alongside the alternative historical explanations.

No automatic Plotinus-to-India doctrine arrow: Porphyry reports Plotinus's desire to learn Persian and Indian wisdom on the aborted expedition of 243. That biographical interest does not establish that a specific Indian doctrine entered the Enneads.

Greek and translated source dates: Most ancient composition years are unknown. Author-death bounds identify underlying works, not the dates of later collections, manuscript copies or Arabic redactions.

Jilveh date and crosscurrents: Jilveh died in 1897. His Avicennan commitments did not prevent annotation of Sadra or Qaysari. These glosses evidence engagement, not wholesale adherence.

Sabzavari's mixed repertoire: Sabzavari is appropriately centered in Sadrian philosophy, yet directly engaged Suhrawardi and criticized some of Sadra's proofs. His teaching repertoire also included Jurjani and Lahiji.

Akbarian reception: qualification: This is a selective textual atlas, not an inventory of every Akbarian work. Titles, colophons, critical-edition introductions and scholarly source identifications have priority over thematic resemblance.

Akbarian reception: qualification: All dates concern composition unless expressly labelled otherwise. BeforeYYYY is only a terminus, not a publication or completion year. Gregorian spans preserve uncertain AH conversion.

Akbarian reception: qualification: Exact book arrows require textual evidence. Conceptual influence lacking a named source work is stored separately in contextual_relations for summary maps or annotations.

Akbarian reception: qualification: K 16 primary-edition check: local scanned PDFp 332 is printedEnglishp 9. K 19 check: local PDFp 7 is printedp 3, PDFp 9 is printedp 5. OCR was used only to locate passages; these were visually read.

Akbarian reception: qualification: Further leads deliberately not promoted to firm edges: DawwaniShawakil Akbarian citations; exact FarangiMahall curriculum recensions; book-specific sources of Taswiya; named-source dependency of Jili's whole Insan; unproven ancient Buddhist or Iranian chains.

Tahdhib, logic / kalam and commentary families (revision 4): Logic and kalam are constituent sections of one 1387 treatise, not separate authored works; their analytical nodes are labelled accordingly. Distinguish an original commentary, a gloss, a critique, and a report of abridgement. The section relationships are structural, not doctrinal influence. The logic part has a far larger commentary corpus; the list here is representative, not an exhaustive register of fifty-plus works. The 1560 completion date for Yazdi is supported; competing death dates 981 and 1015 AH remain visible. Lahiji's Persian direct commentary and gloss on Yazdi are treated as distinct according to references, subject to future manuscript collation. Al-Miri's exact identity is not resolved; the Gelenbevi branch is marked qualified rather than equated with Mir Zahid. Sanandaji's Taqrib and its printed appendices are not conflated; 335-page 1901 volume is the checked physical extent. Manuscript copy and later printing dates remain bounds, never silently converted into composition dates.

Complete work and corpus catalogue

W156 Early Pythagorean teaching (no authentic book)

Pythagoras and early followers | Pythagoras c.570-490 BCE | Activity c.530-500 BCE; no dated authored text | Samos / southern Italy

Classification: ancient / context. Non-text anchor. Later pseudepigrapha and retrospective claims must not be treated as Pythagoras' own books.

W174 Commentary on Aristotle’s Categories

Sergius of Reshaina | d.536 | Before 536 | Reshaina / Alexandria

Classification: christian / commentary. Original Syriac philosophical exposition within an Alexandrian school tradition.

Sources: G21, G22

W147 On the Creator and the true religion

Theodore Abu Qurra | fl.c.800 | late 8th-early 9th century | Palestine / Harran

Classification: christian / treatise complex. Modern scholarship separates the conventionally titled treatise into multiple units. Included as dialogue context, without a fabricated direct arrow to Ash’ari.

Sources: E30

W185 On First Philosophy

Abu Yusuf al-Kindi | c.800-after 866 | c.833-842 (dedication context) | Baghdad

Classification: falsafa / independent. Only part survives. Aristotle, Neoplatonic metaphysics and Christian anti-eternalism are actively recombined.

Sources: G15

W119 Reported theological teaching [lost corpus]

Ibrahim al-Nazzam | death disputed; often c.835-845 | early 9th century (activity) | Basra / Baghdad

Classification: mutazili / reported corpus. His criticism of atomism is part of early kalam diversity; Mu’tazilism was never a single atomist doctrine.

Sources: E03

W118 Reported theological teaching [lost corpus]

Abu al-Hudhayl al-’Allaf | death disputed, 9th century | c.800-mid-9th century (activity) | Basra / Baghdad

Classification: mutazili / reported corpus. No securely surviving authored book is used here. Doxographical reporting is shown separately from direct textual borrowing.

Sources: E02

W148 Kitab al-Burhan

’Ammar al-Basri | fl.9th century | first half 9th century | Iraq

Classification: christian / independent. An Arabic Christian author responding creatively to his Islamic intellectual setting. Shared topics alone do not identify a specific Muslim source book.

Sources: E31

W120 Teaching on attributes and speech [lost corpus]

’Abd Allah b. Sa’id Ibn Kullab | d.c.854 | before / around 854 (activity bound) | Basra

Classification: sunni / reported corpus. Reports in Ash’ari supply identifiable evidence; a source-book title cannot be recovered for each doctrine.

Sources: E04

W125 Fadilat al-Mu’tazila [lost]

al-Jahiz | d.868/69 | before 868/69 | Basra / Baghdad

Classification: mutazili / lost work. Known through the ensuing polemical exchange.

Sources: E16

W149 Refutation of the Christians [fragments]

al-Kindi | d.c.870 | 9th century; before c. 870 | Baghdad

Classification: falsafa / critique. Uses Porphyrian logical distinctions against the Trinity; fragments survive in Yahya’s response.

Sources: E32

W175 Risala on the Syriac and Arabic translations of Galen

Hunayn ibn Ishaq | 809-873 | First Arabic redaction 856; later updates | Baghdad

Classification: translation / bibliography. Documentary witness to translators, patrons and textual revision. It is not itself a source of Avicenna’s metaphysical doctrines.

Sources: G23, G24

W177 Theology of Aristotle (pseudo-Aristotle)

Ibn Na'ima al-Himsi; al-Kindi's circle | active 9th c. | 9th c.; associated with al-Mu'tasim's son | Baghdad

Classification: translation / adaptation. Adapted Plotinus under Aristotle's name. The preface names translator and correction; exact allocation of interpolations is debated.

Sources: G10

W186 On the Intellect

Abu Yusuf al-Kindi | c.800-after 866 | 9th c.; exact date unknown | Baghdad

Classification: falsafa / independent. Early Arabic classification of intellect; not interchangeable with Farabi's later treatise.

W117 Early Mu'tazili / kalam settings [context]

Wasil b. 'Ata', 'Amr b. 'Ubayd and later circles | 8th-9th centuries; founders d.748 and 761 | 8th-9th centuries (activity) | Basra

Classification: mutazili / context. Broad historical setting, not a jointly authored book. Its hypothesis link does not assert Buddhist influence on Wasil or 'Amr individually.

Sources: E01

W123 al-'Alim wa-l-muta'allim

Attributed to Abu Hanifa; transmitted by Abu Muqatil | Abu Hanifa d.767 | 8th-9th-century transmitted text; attribution disputed | Kufa / Samarqand transmission

Classification: sunni / attributed treatise. Do not equate the received text's date with Abu Hanifa's death. Traditional attribution and modern source criticism diverge.

Sources: E12, E13

W151 'Ishrun maqala (Twenty Chapters)

Dawud b. Marwan al-Muqammis | fl.9th century | 9th century (approximate) | Mesopotamia

Classification: jewish / independent. Early Jewish Arabic systematic theology. Christian learning and Muslim debate form its setting; no direct source-book arrow is asserted here.

Sources: E35, E36

W178 Discourse on the Pure Good / Book of Causes

Anonymous Arabic redactor (pseudo-Aristotle) | 9th c. context | 9th c. (Kindian context probable) | Baghdad context

Classification: translation / adaptation. Proclean propositions reworked with Arabic Neoplatonic material; not a genuine work of Aristotle.

Sources: G43, G10

W199 Buddhist-kalam contact hypothesis

Central Asian Buddhist schools; modern reconstruction | not a single author or book | Possible contact in 7th-9th c.; hypothesis studied in 2018/2022 | Balkh / Central Asia

Classification: context / hypothesis. A thematic hypothesis concerning epistemology, Samaniyya and atomism. No surviving Buddhist-to-Arabic philosophical translation is established by this node.

Sources: G40, G41

W200 Arabic epitome: On the Contingency of the World

Attributed to John Philoponus; Arabic redactor uncertain | Greek author c.490-570; Arabic milieu proposed 9th c. | Arabic epitome probably 9th c.; attribution of milieu proposed | Kindian circle proposed; later Christian Arabic preservation

Classification: christian / adaptation. Partial Greek correspondence is established; Kindian production is Mandolino's reconstruction, not a surviving translation colophon.

Sources: G34

W202 Arabic Paraphrase of Metaphysics Lambda

Themistius; Ishaq ibn Hunayn (translation) | Ishaq d.910/11 | Latter half of 9th c. proposed | Baghdad

Classification: translation / translation. Arabic fragments survive; Moshe ibn Tibbon's complete Hebrew version dates to 1255.

Complete textual relationship register

F_e02 [critique; qualified]

Avicennan philosophical teaching [corpus anchor] -> Tahafut al-falasifa

Ghazali targets Avicennan philosophical teaching. The earlier atlas used Shifa’ as a surrogate for that corpus; the revised endpoint makes the actual scope explicit. No unique source book is proved here.

Sources: F36

F_e03 [textual_use; direct]

Tahafut al-falasifa -> al-Iqtisad fi l-i’tiqad

Iqtisad explicitly refers to Tahafut. This establishes actual literary use, not merely the chronological order of the two works.

Avicennan philosophical teaching [corpus anchor] -> al-Mabahith al-mashriqiyya

Razi critically develops Avicennan philosophy; the particular source book remains unspecified.

Sources: F07

F_e05 [commentary; direct]

al-Isharat wa-l-tanbihat -> Sharh al-Isharat wa-l-tanbihat

Razi’s work is explicitly a commentary on Avicenna’s Isharat, frequently raising objections to its arguments.

al-Isharat wa-l-tanbihat -> Hall mushkilat al-Isharat / Sharh al-Isharat

Tusi’s Sharh explains Avicenna’s Isharat in a sustained textual commentary.

Sharh al-Isharat wa-l-tanbihat -> Hall mushkilat al-Isharat / Sharh al-Isharat

McGinnis documents Tusi’s response to Razi’s objections within the commentary on Avicenna; Tusi is not merely commenting on Razi as his sole base text.

Muhassal afkar al-mutaqaddimin wa-l-muta’akhkhirin -> Talkhis al-Muhassal / Naqd al-Muhassal

Tusi quotes Razi’s Muhassal and evaluates its claims. The historical bibliographical notice reproduces his explicit critical purpose and qala/aqulu format.

F_e09 [commentary; direct]

Muhassal afkar al-mutaqaddimin wa-l-muta’akhkhirin -> al-Mufassal fi sharh al-Muhassal

Both the historical bibliography and modern manuscript publisher identify Mufassal as a commentary on Razi’s Muhassal.

F_e10 [commentary; direct]

Tajrid al-i’tiqad / Tajrid al-kalam -> Kashf al-murad fi sharh Tajrid al-i’tiqad

Kashf al-murad is Hilli’s explicit commentary on Tajrid; the relation is textual, beyond the author’s personal association with Tusi.

Sources: F19, F22

F_e11 [commentary; direct]

Tajrid al-i'tiqad / Tajrid al-kalam -> Tasdid al-qawa'id fi sharh Tajrid al-'aqa'id

The critical edition identifies Tusi's text as Isfahani's base. A Sunni commentator here works directly on an Imami theological matn.

Sources: F19, F25

F_e12 [gloss; direct]

Tasdid al-qawa'id fi sharh Tajrid al-'aqa'id -> Hashiya 'ala Sharh al-Tajrid

The edition distinguishes Jurjani's gloss from Isfahani's continuous commentary. Calling Jurjani's work a gloss directly on Qushji would be chronologically impossible.

F_e13 [commentary; direct]

Tawali' al-anwar min matali' al-anzar -> Matali' al-anzar fi sharh Tawali' al-anwar

Matali al-anzar is the named commentary on Baydawi's Tawali al-anwar, not a commentary on Tusi.

F_e14 [critique; direct]

Sharh al-Isharat wa-l-tanbihat -> al-Muhakamat bayna sharhay al-Isharat

Qutb al-Din's Muhakamat arbitrates between the two Isharat commentaries; Fakhr al-Din's is one of the explicitly identified pair.

Sources: F31, F34

F_e15 [critique; direct]

Hall mushkilat al-Isharat / Sharh al-Isharat -> al-Muhakamat bayna sharhay al-Isharat

Tusi's Isharat commentary is the second of the pair assessed by Qutb al-Din. The adjudication is not simply a further identical exposition.

al-Mawaqif fi 'ilm al-kalam -> Sharh al-Maqasid

Sharh Maqasid explicitly names and quotes Mawaqif in its account of necessary knowledge, and prefers sahib al-Mawaqif's account in the discussion of made quiddity. This proves textual engagement, not just earlier chronology.

Sources: F28, F29

F_e19 [commentary; direct]

al-Mawaqif fi 'ilm al-kalam -> Sharh al-Mawaqif

Jurjani's 1405 work is a continuous commentary on Iji's Mawaqif; this is the unambiguous central genealogy of the later gloss tradition.

Sources: F30, F35

F_e20 [textual_use; documented]

Muhassal afkar al-mutaqaddimin wa-l-muta'akhkhirin -> al-Mawaqif fi 'ilm al-kalam

TDV explicitly identifies verbatim headings and sentences taken from Razi's Muhassal, comparing Muhassal p.18 with Mawaqif p.14. This establishes work-specific borrowing independently of chronology or teacher narratives.

Sources: F35

F_e21 [reported_source; documented]

Nihayat al-'uqul fi dirayat al-usul -> al-Mawaqif fi 'ilm al-kalam

Jurjani's preface characterizes Iji's Mawaqif as containing the distilled substance of Nihayat al-uqul alongside Abkar al-afkar. This is explicit near-contemporary testimony to a named source, not a claim that Mawaqif is its commentary.

Sources: F37

F_e22 [reported_source; documented]

Abkar al-afkar fi usul al-din -> al-Mawaqif fi 'ilm al-kalam

Jurjani's preface specifically identifies the substance of Amidi's Abkar al-afkar within Iji's Mawaqif. This supports a source relation; no sole-source or complete-abbreviation claim is made.
Sources: F37

F_e23 [textual_use; documented]

Muhassal afkar al-mutaqaddimin wa-l-muta'akhkhirin -> Tawali' al-anwar min matali' al-anzar

Atay's textual comparison identifies copied phrases, definitions and technical terminology in Tawali from Muhassal, despite lack of acknowledgment in Baydawi's text. The work remains an independent synthesis.
Sources: F38

F_e24 [hypothesis; proposed specific channel]

Muhassal afkar al-mutaqaddimin wa-l-muta'akhkhirin -> Abkar al-afkar fi usul al-din

Hassan identifies Razi's atomism proof, with a Muhassal locus, in Amidi. Because it recurs in other Razi works, Muhassal as the specific transmission channel remains a hypothesis. This edge is weaker than the demonstrated Razi-doctrine connection.
